

Only a well-paid job is a good job.

Having a job is a big responsibility and a good way to start thinking of the future. All over the world we have all kind of jobs such as teaching as teacher, playing in a film or building structures. So different jobs have different intentions and they have different payments. Some of them are well paid and some of them are not.

If you work 8 or 12 hours a day and you put all your energy to this job, you deserve a good payment. So you earn a lot of money and you can afford all kind of things for your self and your family. You can go on a vacation, buy a bicycle for your son, and take your wife to a fancy restaurant. You can live a dreamy life.

But what if you became addictive to your job? You will spend all your day at your office, thinking of the payment and you won't have any time left to spent it with your family.

Or you will go to work just for the money and not because you like to do that. Also in all countries we have freely work which lots of people like to do and it isn't paid at all. They do it for fun, for meeting other people, making friends...

Having a well paid job doesn't mater, because money can buy a house, but not a home, buy a watch but not the time, a book but not the learning. So money isn't all and any job is a good job if it server for a good meaning.
