

Parliamentary Election in Slovenia 2008

The citizens of Slovenia voted new members of the 90-seat Parliament last Sunday. 62, 3% voters voted till 7.p.m.

The results of the election stand as follows: Social Democrats (SD)-30,5%, Slovenian Democratic Party (SDS)-29,3%, For real-9,4%, Democratic Party of Slovenian Pensioners (DeSUS)-7,5%, Slovenian National Party (SNS)-5,5% . . .

It seemed everything could change in the last moment; especially they did not get votes from Slovenian people who live abroad.

SD made allians with two other parties: for real and Liberal Democracy of Slovenia (LDS), which got 5, 2% of votes.

All three parties got 45, 1% of all votes and they can create coalition government for the next four years.

Since 2004 Janez Janša has been the prime minister. In the time before election the Finnland television came up with some information about Patria, which manufactured the weapons.

The prime minister was probably connected with this firm.

The result of the elections could be caused by the negative election campaign.

The Slovenian people hope the new government will bring better life.
