

Vin Diesel

Born Mark Vincent on July 18, 1967, in New York City. His father taught theatre, while his mother was a psychologist and astrologist. At the age of seven he gave his first stage performance at Theater for the New City. He liked acting and continued working for the local theater company.

His break in theater happened when at the age of seven he and his friends broke into a theater named "Theatre for the New City," which was produced in Greenwich Village, to vandalize it, to their surprise, a woman stopped and offered them each a script and $20, on the condition that they would attend everyday after school. From there, He was regularly acting for the New York Repertory company run by his stepfather.

By the time Mark Vincent was fifteen years old he was heavily into body building and extreme sports. He had begun to look much older for his age. He got his first job as a bouncer at the nightclub. During the day he would act in various theater productions. It that time that he changed his name to Vin Diesel.

Soon he went to Hollywood. On his return to New York, his mother gifted him a book called "Feature Films at Used Car Prices". The book exhorted struggling actors to make their own movies at a low cost and sell it at various film festivals. He wrote a short film based on his own experiences as an actor, called Multi-Facial (1994). It was selected at the 1995 Cannes Film Festival where it was well received. Vin Diesel played the lead role, he wrote the script, directed it and produced it.

"Multi-Facial" opened the doors of Hollywood to him. Steven Spielberg and director of the animated movie "The Iron Giant." Were impressed.

Vin Diesel had always been at a disadvantage because of his multi racial looks. This had now become an advantage. He could pull of Asian, Latin American and African characters. Vin Diesel's movies include "The Chronicles of Riddick," "A Man Apart," "The Fast and the Furious," "XXX," "Boiler Room" and "Knockaround Guys." Saving private ryan
